The President's Principal Military Advisor Praises Veterans Treatment Courts

Recently, Admiral Mike Mullen, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, sent a letter to Attorney General Holder expressing his gratitude for the Department's support of Veterans Treatment Courts (VTCs). Admiral Mullen said that VTCs are making a real difference by giving veterans a second chance and improving the quality of their lives. Since the first VTC opened in 2008, these courts have been expanding rapidly, and currently there are over 60 operational VTCs in 24 states.

VTCs serve veterans struggling with addiction, serious mental illness, and/or co-occurring disorders, and they promote sobriety, recovery, and stability through a coordinated response that involves local and federal partners who can address the behavioral health treatment, housing and employment, and collaboration with the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs health care networks, the Veterans' Benefits Administration, volunteer veteran mentors, and veterans and veterans' family support organizations.

Expanding the problem-solving court model to address the specific needs of veterans is having initial success and we will keep tracking progress. In 2010, BJA launched the Veterans Treatment Court Training Program to provide training for court practitioners—including judges and service providers—to respond to veteran-specific treatment needs. DID YOU KNOW?

Currently, there are over 23 million veterans in the United States. Of those, 1.7 million are veterans of Iraq and Afghanistan. One in five veterans reported symptoms of a mental disorder, and one in four veterans aged 18–25 met criteria for having a substance abuse disorder in 2006. The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs estimates that as many as one third of the adult homeless population has served in the military and that at any given time there are as many as 130,000 homeless veterans. Up to 75 percent of the veteran homeless population suffers from a substance abuse disorder. In 2007, the Bureau of Justice Statistics reported that over 1.1 million veterans were arrested. FEATURED PROGRAM

Gun violence. Neighborhood drug markets. Persistent street and commercial robberies. These problems are not unique to one jurisdiction; they and other chronic crime problems regularly confront law enforcement agencies across the United States. BJA's Smart Policing Initiative (SPI) supports agencies in identifying effective and economical tactics and strategies that reduce crime. This is critically important as agencies struggle with reduced budgets and staffing limitations. Remedying hot spots with large concentrations of patrol officers is no longer feasible for many departments. Solutions must be proven effective, precise, driven by data analysis, and surgically applied. That confidence is gained by incorporating research partners throughout the SPI process. Under SPI, BJA is currently funding 16 law enforcement agencies to tackle serious crime problems by either testing new solutions or modifying previously-identified interventions to their particular set of circumstances, and using their research partner, they are carefully measuring the results of their efforts which will be made available to law enforcement agencies across the country.
